Introduction

The following inventory report on historic sites, buildings, structures, and objects in California has been prepared in compliance with the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966. The inventory is a compilation of information gathered during the survey conducted under the direction of the State Historic Preservation Officer, William Penn Mott, Jr. Mr. Mott is the director of the California State Department of Parks and Recreation and was appointed State Historic Preservation Officer by Governor Ronald Reagan to administer California's participation in programs authorized under the act. The current inventory includes only those features¹ that had been recognized or submitted for consideration by September 1, 1972.

Historic features listed in the inventory consist of the following:

- o Historic properties in the California State Park System
- o Registered California Historical Landmarks
- o Points of Historic Interest
- o Buildings and sites previously inventoried through federal register programs
- o Archeological survey sites
- o Properties inventoried as historic resources by a county
- o Properties already designated as National Landmarks, all listings in the National Register of Historic Places, and properties nominated for the National Register by the State Historic Preservation Officer.

Features were selected for this inventory solely on the basis of their historic interest. The age of the features was not considered significant for the purpose of compiling the inventory, so the 50-year limit suggested in federal guidelines was disregarded.

It should be understood that this first edition of the inventory is not a complete list of all the historic features in California.

¹The word "feature" is used herein to designate any historic site, building, structure, object, or the like that qualifies for inclusion in the inventory.

The present list, which contains approximately 3,000 entries, was completed under Phase 1 of the survey and inventory process. To a great extent it is a desk inventory made up of the more conspicuous historic features that have already received some measure of recognition.

Under Phase 2 of the survey and inventory of historic features, which is now beginning, this Department's representatives will solicit help from the counties and from all other local agencies interested in the preservation of history. Enthusiastic local support is essential. Because of the geographic size of California, the survey and inventory of historic features can only approach completion within a reasonable period of time if counties and other local agencies actively participate.

When compilation of the inventory under Phase 1 began in February, 1970, the State Historic Preservation Officer invited local participation. And, although several counties and some cities had already developed programs for recognition of historic features (some had even prepared master plans for historic preservation), most of the local agencies and historical societies were unprepared to respond in the time available.

Under Phase 2 of the survey and inventory process, representatives of the State Historic Preservation Officer have already contacted the boards of supervisors of California's 58 counties. The boards of supervisors have been asked to establish historical advisory committees made up not only of at-large members but also, for balance, containing some members with specific expertise in such fields as archeology, history, architecture, and library management. Meetings are now being organized with representatives of each county to acquaint them with inventory procedures and to encourage their participation.

The staff of the State Historic Preservation Officer will cooperate with and advise representatives of all local, private, and governmental agencies concerned with the preservation of history. However, the State Historic Preservation Officer believes that, in the interest of administrative efficiency, all inputs to the inventory must be made through the designated representatives of the county boards of supervisors. With the continuing support of local agencies, acting with advice from the state staff, it is expected that California's inventory of historic features will ultimately contain over 50,000 individual entries.

To help local agencies select features for inclusion in the inventory, the State Historic Preservation Officer has developed forms, and a procedural guide. Statewide use of these forms and procedures will ultimately establish a body of recorded data on California's historic features that, being standardized, will allow objective comparisons of similar historic features.

The inventory catalogs each feature in terms of three broad groups: historical eras, cultural categories, and the registers, lists, or inventories that have recognized the feature. The ownership of the property — whether public or private — is also noted whenever that information is available.

Most of the time the classifications are general enough to include all types of historic features. For example, structures that are significant historically because of architectural or engineering aspects would be listed under a historic era and a cultural category. As a specific example, a mission, although having architectural significance, would appear under religion and the appropriate historic era.

The data in this inventory are summarized in tables 1 and 2, Appendix A. Table 1 summarizes the inventoried historical features in each historic era and cultural category. Table 2 is the same, but it summarizes only those historic features that are located in the California State Park System.

Table 1 reveals the expected scarcity of features dealing with early Hispanic, recent Indian, and early Indian sites. The structures of early agrarian or hunter-gatherer societies are fragile, and surviving historic features other than artifacts are rare or perhaps nonexistent in some classifications.

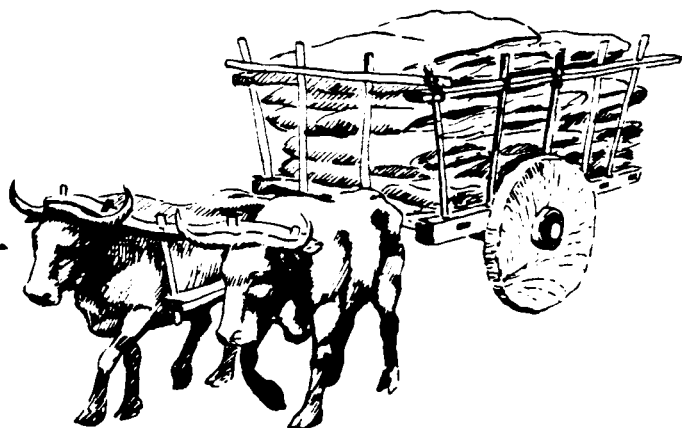

Table 2 indicates that deficiencies within the State Park System parallel those in the statewide inventory and that the heaviest emphasis within the parks is now on features representing the early American subera.

So it is evident that priority must be given to the addition to the State Park System of historic features from the early and recent Indian suberas, both Hispanic suberas, and the late American subera. Plans are now underway to locate historic features that clearly typify significant characteristics of each of these suberas, and steps will be taken to acquire such features as soon as they can be identified.

The categories under which the historic features are listed are as follows:

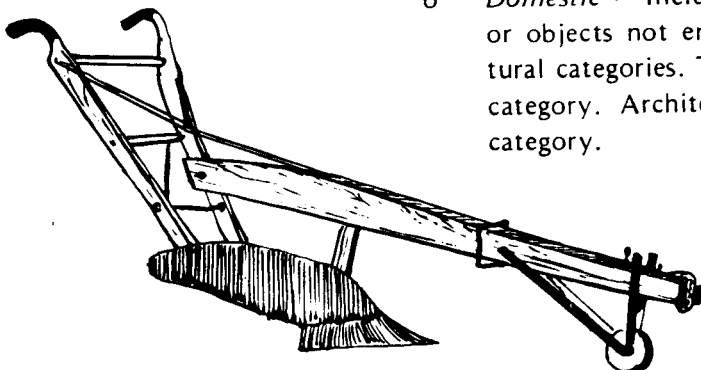

Historic Eras

- o Indian era
 - Early — 15,000 BC to 1 AD
 - Recent — 1 AD to 1848 AD
- o Hispanic era
 - Spanish occupation — 1542 to 1822
 - Mexican occupation — 1822 to 1848
- o American era
 - 1848 to 1900
 - After 1900

Cultural Categories

- o Explorations and settlement — Includes routes, trails, sites, and objects associated with expeditions, explorations, immigrations, and government surveys; buildings, structures, and objects related to early settlements; properties associated with pioneer mining or miners; small pioneer farms; and appropriate Indian sites and artifacts.
- o Economic and industrial — Includes properties or objects associated with mining, agriculture, engineering, transportation, communications, finance, manufacturing, and commerce.
- o Military — Includes forts, garrisons, camps, arsenals, military routes, trails not included under “exploration and settlement,” and associated objects and places.
- o Government — Includes state and local government buildings, structures, and associated objects of all historic eras or the homes or birthplaces of individuals whose major contributions to society were in government. “Law and order” associations are generally placed in this category.
- o Recreation — Includes theaters, parks, sports arenas or facilities, and associated objects. Mineral springs and spas are included here.
- o Social and education — Includes fraternal and social halls, schools, libraries, conference centers, and buildings associated with early volunteer fire companies. Sites associated with notorious bandits may be included here as reflecting aspects of social mores.
- o Religion — Includes churches, temples, and associated properties and religious objects or artifacts.
- o Domestic — Includes all residential and associated properties or objects not embraced within any of the other seven cultural categories. The early residential hotels are placed in this category. Architectural features are also included in this category.

Classifications, Registers, and Inventories

- o National Historic Landmark — Features of national historic significance are automatically included in the National Register of Historic Places
- o National Register — Items on the National Register of Historic Places are categorized as having:
 - National significance
 - State significance
 - Local significance
- o California Historical Landmarks — A register compiled by the California Historical Landmarks Advisory Committee of historic features having statewide significance
- o Points of Historical Interest — A list of historic features having local significance, compiled by the California Historical Landmarks Advisory Committee on the recommendation of county boards of supervisors
- o County Inventory — A compilation by a county of its historically significant features
- o City Inventory — A compilation by a city, submitted through the county, of its historically significant features
- o State Park — Indicates whether the feature is located in a state park
- o National Survey — HABS — Historic Sites and Buildings — A list of historic sites and buildings prepared by the Historic American Buildings Survey (HABS) under the sponsorship of the National Park Service.

The location of each historic feature listed in the inventory is depicted on the county maps in Appendix B.
